III) READING

AN UNFORGETTABLE LIFE LESSON

Even today, having judged those men so poorly, I still feel embarrassed. I clearly remember that it was a very cold night and there was lots of ice on the ground. I was hardly walking to the parking lot to drive home. I was carrying two large bags in my hands. When I saw my car, I noticed that it was the only car left. There was nobody around and that was terrifying. Suddenly, I slipped and fell down on my back. I couldn't move. I didn't know how much time passed lying on the floor. I just froze when I saw two young men dressed like gangsters coming towards me. "Oh, no!" I said and started to tremble with fear. I was sure that they were dangerous and they were coming to harm me. One of them was holding a torch in his hand and I saw his friend's scary face in the dim light. That's the last thing I could remember about that night. I opened my eyes, I realised that I was in a hospital seeing the nurse with a nice smile on her face. She came close and said "You are very lucky, ma'am and it's really great that there are still good people in the world." While talking, she was pointing at the door. It was open and the men were just standing next to the door to give me an unforgettable life lesson: Never judge a book by its cover.
